What is the law?

The law comes from several sources...

Constitution	A constitution establishes individual rights as well as the structure and authority of the government. For example, the Maine Constitution establishes that, “The supreme executive power of this State shall be vested in a Governor.”
Statutes	Statutes are the laws passed by the Legislature organized by subject. For example, Maine has many motor vehicle statutes. Statute 29-A MRS §2079 says, “Braking or acceleration may not be unnecessarily made so as to cause a harsh and objectionable noise.”
Regulations	Regulations are written by government agencies, e.g. the Department of Health and Human Services, but they have the force of law because agencies get rulemaking authority from statutes. For example, the statutes say that to renew his license, a real estate appraiser must take continuing education classes. The regulations, written by the Board of Real Estate Appraisers, specify how many hours and which classes are allowed.
Ordinances	If there’s no state or federal law on a particular subject (e.g. whether dogs are required to be on a leash), a town or city might pass its own law, or ordinance.
Court opinions, or case law	Written by judges, court opinions interpret the law (i.e. statutes, regulations, other court opinions, etc.) and decide how it applies to a particular situation when two parties disagree on what the law means. Some court decisions, called precedential , must be followed by other courts. These decisions make up case law .

Sometimes, more than one type of law applies, or is relevant, to a situation. For example, to figure out if a local official can hold more than one position or office, you might have to look at statutes, court cases, and town ordinances.

Constitution of the State of Maine

A constitution establishes individual rights as well as the structure and authority of the government.

About

The Maine Constitution provides law on a range of topics. Some sections are broad. For example, they give authority to the State's three branches of government. Some sections provide more specific guidance, such as the number of State Senators or the procedure for issuing State bonds.

Session Laws and Statutes

Statutes are the laws passed by the Legislature organized by subject.

About

The Maine Revised Statutes (MRS) contains Maine's written law. The Legislature passes individual laws, or session laws, on many topics. The language in these laws is then organized by subject into the statutes, or code. One session law passed by the Legislature might be distributed, or allocated, into one or more statutes. Likewise, each statute is affected by one or more session laws.

A citation to the MRS looks like this:

Legislation

Session laws are created through the legislative process.

About

Every year, the Maine Legislature considers 1,000+ proposals for legislation and it enacts hundreds of session laws. When researching the law, sometimes it is important to know the legislative history of a particular session law, or why it was enacted.

Regulations

Regulations are written by government agencies, but they have the force of law.

About

Maine's regulations are called the Code of Maine Rules (regulations are often referred to as rules). The Code of Maine Rules (CMR) is arranged by numbers which identify the department, departmental unit, and chapter. For example, 01-015 CMR Ch. 1 represents Chapter 1 of the Maine Milk Commission, which is part of the Department of Agriculture, Conservation and Forestry.

Court Rules

Court Rules explain in detail the procedures you must follow for your case to be considered by the Courts.

About

Court rules are written by the Maine Courts and they have the force of law. They explain, for example, how much time someone has to file documents in a court case and how those documents should be formatted. There are several different kinds of court rules depending on what kind of court case you are involved in:

- Maine Rules of Civil Procedure
- Maine Rules of Unified Criminal Procedure
- Maine Rules of Evidence
- Maine Rules of Appellate Procedure
- Maine Rules of Probate Procedure
- Maine Rules of Small Claims Procedure
