Heating oil prices are driving out young, middle income residents like myself and my family. We choose to live here despite being able to make more money in similar positions in almost any other state, despite being taxed at a higher rate than many other states, and despite having to pay extra bills (such as heating oil) that would be much lower or non existent in other states. Heating oil prices are nearly 75% higher than they were the last time crude oil was at a comparable price to what it is right now. So until both the Maine government and the federal government can stand up to companies price gouging regular American citizens, you owe us some relief in the form of our tax money coming back to us. Until that happens this state will continue to lose young, skilled workers, becoming older and older, and relying more and more on tourism than ever before. This state is collapsing quickly and changes need to be made. Also Veto that useless flag. No one wants it.
