We are incredibly blessed to live on Lake Penneesseewassee in Norway, Maine. The sole detractor to this bucolic environment is the growing presence of wake boats that have caused significant shoreline erosion and damage to both our dock and boat. Being conscientious environmental stewards of Lake Norway's health, we have restored our shoreline with native plants to help prevent erosion but know with the ever increasing presence of wake boats this measure will need to be repeated often. There are times when we have left our large dock for safety reasons as the enormous waves make their way to shore to result in significant and dangerous rocking and shifting and dock legs needing to be readjusted.
