The importance of protecting coastal land from exploitation and change of use. At this time our coasts are protected from the overreach of corporate exploitation and the devastation they cause to our natural systems. The existing use is balanced by allowing access by land where small fishermen fish but are not allowed to bring in equipment that would destroy this balanced system of life where land and sea life meet. Ownership taken over by a system that is already regulated and is working to allow for the financial overreach by companies to steal private property is not in the best interest of the people of Maine or our shared interest in saving the precious life supporting systems we have . I oppose any change in use, access or ownership to coastal land and also expect this issue to be made clear by non corporate entities that have no financial gain. Don't change what works and provide a long and open discussion and public exposure to this effort. Protecting our coast is literally, a life sustaining issue. Corporations have proven they are not responsible in this way. How many time do we trust them when we all know they only have one motive and that is profits.
