LD2283 ought to pass.

My opinion:

Common sense says the yellow flag law is inadequate as a measure to protect all citizens from gun violence. A family, or significant others, should have the right and responsibility to legally and temporarily take steps to remove weapons from a relative in crisis. The relative can then take legal steps to reassume ownership after proving reliability. All rights are valued this way. Gun rights should not overrule health and safety for the greater good. I think the founders intended the second amendment to be used in a regulated manner.
