We have lived next to a home that has hounds for over 10 years and they bark day and night. The owner has skirted the law by purchasing more land to be in the criteria of having agricultural guard dogs law of 5 acres or more, got chickens and rooster and selling eggs at end of the road. But the law says you can't abut a residential neighborhood and your land needs to be recognized as farmland. These dogs are in cages so how can they be guarding livestock? The laws need to be stronger so they can't live in a residential neighborhood and there needs to be drastic laws put in place. Listen to the audio I have attached and I don't think you would like to set out on your deck and listen to this day and night. I'm afraid it's not going to change until someone gets hurt and or takes drastic measures. The police cannot help until this escalates and aco's can only do so much, and some of the towns are trying but it takes money and people to enforce. I'm almost 70 and have worked hard my whole life to be where I am and I just want the dogs to stop barking. There is many, many people in the same place I am... Is that possible to change the laws so the towns have something to sink their teeth into to enforce?
