I'm writing in support of LD716. Living in a rural town surrounded by farms and having livestock on our property for several generations we've not had any issues with coyotes. We have not lost any calves that were born out in the pasture in wooded areas. We have game cameras set up in several parts of our property. We get more pictures of deer, turkey and squirrels than coyotes. We are hunters ourselves and our property is open to hunting by permission. We only had a few people that hunted turkeys a few for deer and none for coyotes.

I think there is still much to learn about the current population, distribution, human-coyote interactions in rural and more populated areas, etc.
Thank you for your time.
