The reoccurring question arises in regards to why a citizen would need more than ten rounds of ammunition. There are reasons beginning with self defense against multiple attackers in a home invasion situation, more than one assailant in public settings when large capacity magazines are needed to save lives. These are high stress situations when someone defending themselves requires more than 10 rounds to do so, and doesn't have time to change their magazine while being attacked or, defending others.

My husband and I belong to a shooting range, where we freely enjoy and exercise our Second Amendment rights utilizing common use items. We surround ourselves with law abiding citizens, who share our enthusiasm for responsible gun ownership, and enjoy friendly competitions. Our constitution is very clear about our Second Amendment rights, the document you as legislators swore to uphold while placing your hand on the Bible.
