It would be a mistake to repeal a law that is designed to prevent more plastic from entering our waste stream. Single-use and plastic bags are a significant contributor to the plastic waste that is slowly poisoning our water, our wildlife, and our own bodies. We need to take every step we can to legislate change that will help protect our land and water, as well as the health of generations to come. The science is irrefutable; the evidence of microplastic invading every physical place and thing on this planet speaks for itself. Maine needs to be part of the solution, and not move backwards on our environmental protections.
