

Hannah Phair
Oakland
LD 217

I believe that this cause is especially important as a high school student in Maine. I have found that it is a lot easier for educators to encourage safe sex rather than abstinence, as students respond better when being told how to do things correctly, rather than not at all. During these times, teenagers will tend to go through with any of their desires, no matter the consequences. By demanding schools to require free condoms in schools it will enable students to believe in safer practices and serve as education for sexually active teens, instead of attempting to inhibit all forms of the activity.