

Darrah Wagner
Winterport
LD 1529

Maine has a limited amount of older forest left, just 3% of Maine's unorganized territories compared to 70% in the past. These forests are important for storing carbon, protecting the ecology of the land among other things. Older growth forests can be encouraged to expand, bringing their environmental benefits with them by planting similar tree species at close distances providing new habitat for old forest species.