

John Dailey
Sumner
LD 1666

I'm a bit of a nerd. I write science software for a living and have a fancy education. I understand systems and math very well.

First past the post voting is fundamentally flawed in that it ensures that only two parties will ever be viable in a democracy. It's hard to blame those that enshrined first past the post voting in our founding documents because the math that proves this was not discovered until after WWII, but it is still a mistake that should be corrected, even if they should not be blamed for the error.

Ranked choice is one of the most viable alternatives to first past the post. If you constituents are tired of the two party system, then you owe it to them to support expanding ranked choice.

Thank you for your time,
John Dailey