In November 1996, I picked up absentee ballots for my elderly parents so that they could vote, and delivered them back to the town hall in Falmouth. My mother at 75 had never missed an opportunity to vote and she did not want to miss voting that year even though she was sick with stomach cancer. Being able to cast one last ballot was extremely meaningful to her and my father. Please don't change a law that is working just fine. As I was often told when I advocated at the State House, "if it ain't broke, don't fix it."
