For years, major energy companies have known about the science of climate change and how the burning of fossil fuels will increase CO2 levels dramatically over time contributing to dangerous and potentially irreversible climate change including increasingly powerful storms. But instead of seeking other forms of energy and telling the world about the dangers, they told no one, and exponentially helped to increase the amount of fossil fuels burned throughout the world. So of course they are responsible for climate damages and should pay for those damages. They intentionally and negligently caused this harm.
