I work in the cannabis industry in Massachusetts and I can say first hand how track and trace (Metrc) have ruined cannabis in my state. It makes it very hard for small operators to compete because of the added cost so we have big corps pumping out low quality. But testing makes it safe right?? No! If batches fail for mold they can be remediated and sold without the consumer even being aware of it. I as a medical patient rely on small batch cannabis from Maine farmers who put their heart and soul into their products. Do we really want to destroy the last great medical cannabis market in the US? You have something special- keep it that way.
