

TYLER WENTLAND
YORK
LD 1881

Parents are the first teachers and school for their children. They have every right to be informed about what their children are learning and if necessary, refuse what lessons they deem inappropriate, as well as access all records pertaining to their academic, emotional, and physical well-being. If schools want parental support, they must understand their role is to support parents and families, not supercede them.