This proposal, if enacted into law, will create situations that can only be resolved by inspecting the genitals of children. Is that a position the Maine legislators wish to place school administrators in? Is this a good use of state resources against the tiny minority of Maine's children who are trans? Is this heavy handed imposition of state-sanctioned prejudice a lesson we want to be teaching Maine's children? Or should Maine perhaps encourage all its children to learn that public bathrooms are places to politely enter, go, and leave? Raising a generation of bathroom busybodies does not seem to be in Maine's best interests.
