

Elizabeth Whitman
BELFAST
LD 1943

In this day and age of companies focusing less and less on quality, and more and more on prioritizing profit through cost cutting, quality cutting, and service cutting measures, private equity companies lead the way in the cheapifying of America.

The focus of companies is not longer to provide a good or service, but to make money. Private equity firms put even more pressure on the downward trend of quality in American businesses because they often carve up an existing business and eliminate portions and make the entire business less accountable to customers.

The private equity approach is impacting housing, health care, nursing homes, pharmacies, and many other industries.

If there is a way to regulate the predatory impulse of Private Equity and keep the businesses in Maine stable and intact, it would be wise for the government to take some action along these lines. A study to understand the pernicious nature of this financial approach to business would be a first step along the way to save the State of Maine and its residents from this hell on earth.

I am watching with horror. If you want to join me in my horror watch take a look at:

JoAnne Fabric

Walgreens

Steward Hospital in MA

And many many more