My family ran a general store in central Maine for 90 years . We tagged deer there from the mid 50's on . The theory that electronic tagging will have a negative impact on the profits of a business are false . When you have a customer with 200 dollars worth of groceries or a carpenter with 2500 dollars worth of building materials waiting in line for you to tag a 5 dollar deer , of which you get to keep a whole dollar, your seeing a business run as the state would do it , not a successful business owner . Don't get me wrong , hunting season and tagging deer is an almost magical time and generates a lot of interest and camaraderie but if you folks think is financially viable you are mistaken .we even sold guns and ammunition. If you don't believe me you could also ask Representative Paul Flynn, as he also owned and ran a general store in the town next to ours . Oh yes , and by the way . At least half of the hunters tagging deer now don't even have 5 dollars in their picket , they want to use a debit or credit card , further eating into your lowly 1 dollar deer tagging profit .
