

Susan Siens
Unity

The CMP corridor is one of the worst examples of greenwashing ever to be seen. Quebec Hydro flooded indigenous people's lands -- which belies any claim to being clean energy -- to develop hydro power, which they currently sell to New York State through existing transmission lines. Massachusetts is willing to pay them more for the same energy, so Quebec Hydro wants to cut down Maine forest for new transmission lines. Only in the twisted European mindset are cutting down trees and running new transmission lines a good idea to fight climate chaos. We challenge climate chaos by leaving what little is left of the natural world intact, ending insistence on "growth" (which all-too-often equals destruction), conserving energy, and freeing ourselves from utility corporations. Maine politicians have kissed CMP's ring long enough -- do they even know it's owned by foreign corporations?