

Steven Meyerhans
Fairfield
LD 2013

The contamination of farmland and private drinking water sources is a dire and existential catastrophe here in the State of Maine. The State bears much responsibility but it is unfair for the taxpayers to shoulder all of the responsibility. The true culpability lies with the mega corporations such as Dupont and 3M that made astronomical profits from the widespread sale and distribution of these hazardous materials. The State of Maine needs to forcefully litigate for the involvement of these corporations in the resolution of this crisis which will likely cost far in excess of $100 million.