We need to support those farmers that are dealing with the fallout from sludge spreading. These are brave and hardworking individuals who are on the frontlines of what is now exploding as a major health issue in this nation.

As a nation we have not protected the rights and health of our citizens and have sided over the business concerns of corporations, and in doing so have endangered the health all of us.

The State of Maine needs to step up to assist these early pioneers working to address these "forever" pollutants that have been spread on land at the encouragement of the DEP and without review from the EPA. They need support not only with their fight, but with their health and livelihood that have been destroyed by the outfall of corporate greed and state negligence.
