

Jessica Freeman
Veazie
LD 1817

Outdoor education is important at all levels of learning, not only does this allow students to have an outlet for their energy, it allows children in all levels of learning to be able to participate. Students have the opportunity to build real world knowledge and how it can be applied. Being in nature provides positive peer interaction, communication, collaboration as well as critical thinking.