

Brad Moody
AFSCME/DDPC

I currently work at a mental health facility in which I was required to come in to work. I was able to do my job from home I just didn't have that option. I had to risk my physical health to go in to work and then with that risking my families health as well. During the time in which we had received the hazard pay during the State of Emergency it felt like our jobs mattered and that we mattered as employees. When we no longer were receiving the hazard pay and still being in a State of Emergency it seemed like we were forgotten, that our jobs along with us as employees no longer mattered.