The research has shown enormous benefits of no homework for elementary students. My work both in the classroom as an educator and in the student's homes verifies the validity of the research and the concerns. As an educator, my view of homework is to enhance what students already know. In this way, Students are reinforcing their knowledge and gaining self-confidence.

Many parents struggle in ways to help their child with math and writing. This creates a difficult parent child relationship. Dual income families simply do not have the flexibility in their schedules to instruct guide. If you work the clock backwards, you'll see there's not enough hours in the day to maintain hours of homework. Most often homework requires the use of technology. The research also shows amount of light students are exposed to is detrimental.
