

Janet Drew
York

I'm unclear how this bill would be interpreted, or the other bills that are now going to reconsider curriculum. I believe as we look at the social injustices across the Nation, that we do need to have dialogue education around the Constitution civics and how it relates to stories that students find in the news. To try to stop all dialogue would be a mistake democracy demands dialogue and our next generation needs to be cognizant of the opportunities democracy provides, and the threats that can come from many sources of entrenched power. We do need to have living curriculum, we are living history. Who will decide what is in or out what people will be the deciders and who will be ignored or missed. I can see the complications dialogue is key in a democracy