Jennifer Rarrick
Saco

To the Committee:

Requiring the legislators, governors, educators, congressmen, and president... to take a Constitutional course would not be a bad idea either. Why has this not already been a requirement? Every American should know something about their rights, how the government is supposed to work, and what areas the government can rule or not rule.

The whole reason we have the mess we have in politics is due to politicians not knowing the Constitution, not following the Constitution, and not taking their oath to uphold it as a serious vow to the American people.

We Mainers have been living under a communist dictator for the last year, but most don't know this because they don't know that government has no jurisdiction over health. The politicians either don't know the Enumeration Article meaning, or they choose to ignore it because the money going into their pockets is all they are concerned about.

Yes, the Constitution should be a requirement for every graduate. They have the right to know the truth so they can decide if they want to live under communism or be free.