I am writing to state that the students with religious and philosophical exemptions to vaccination should be allowed to continue their schooling in Maine, to receive free appropriate public education, and not be discriminated for believing in their innate natural immune systems. These students are compromising their breathing, wearing masks over their faces, to respect the beliefs of students and staff who believe that masks protect them from invisible germs. Any student should be allowed to participate in school without being injected by a risky unavoidably unsafe procedure, based on outdated theories, which is against the Nuremberg Code, and can cause death. Some believe in chemotherapy and it works for them, some believe in nutritional therapies, and it works for them. We must not discriminate according to beliefs and practices. Medical choice should not be mandated by law.

I support this bill ought to pass.
