We are a furniture retailer and we are very concerned about this legislation. There is currently a national law that originated in California that already prohibits furniture with flame retardant chemicals and all of our suppliers are in compliance with these requirements. This appears to be creating a problem where none currently exists and could significantly affect our business. National manufacturers will not create furniture to comply with Maine's law if it would be different; making it very difficult for us to get product to sell. Please address this so that we can continue to do business as we are now. Thank you in advance for your consideration.
