

Susan Conard
Northport

One of the great frustrations of having a land line is the constant barrage of robocalls and automatically dialed calls supposedly about car insurance, computer "repair" scams, medicare, social security and many other things, including solicitations for donations to organizations that we have no connection to. We also get some of these calls on our cell phones, but much less frequently. I estimate that about 80 percent of the calls on our landline are these types of calls. It is a waste of our time and extremely frustrating, especially when we are eating dinner, or busy with other activities. Clearly the federal do not call list does not work. I strongly support LD511. Any reduction in these types of calls would be wonderful.