I support LD101. The Gulf of Maine is a lucrative and diverse area for wildlife both above and below the surface. It's not spot to place windmills, oil rigs, or any other fixed rig. There is no real benefit to Maine residents to have this in their backyard. Power bills are not expected to drop, created will be mostly out of state workers and even out of country, the jobs will be short term until project is complete. I asked a spokesmen for the windmills and without government subsidies they project wouldn't be financially viable. They will never pay for themselves because they will need to be replaced or rebuilt before you approach the pay off, Vinalhaven would be a perfect expanse of that. Please look at the fact of offshore wind before making such a big decision. We have fruitful waters and have way more to lose than than any other state that borders the ocean. Our waters provide more than a spot to place "clean" energy.
Thank you.
