

Brendon Bass
Brunswick

I write to add my voice to the many calling for universal health care in Maine. Access to good health care should be available for all Maine residents without them having to worry about cost. As Canada and many European states have shown us, governments have accomplished this within their tax structures. Surely Maine can devise and enact a system that (a) meets everyone's health care needs, (b) pays care providers fairly for their education and service, and (c) compensates pharmaceutical and equipment manufacturers for their investment and products without putting profit-making above public health.