

London StAndrews
North Yarmouth

Vaping saved my life, plain and simple. I've been vaping for over 10 years now. Flavors were the most important factor as far as me being able to fully switch from cigarettes to vaping. We don't ban flavored alcohol, even though youth and adults sometimes prefer to drink flavors. We don't ban cars, even though youth have access to keys and go out joyriding (I know I did when I was a kid). If you ban flavors, it will force adults to go to the black market, or go back to smoking. Everyone know smoking is a death sentence. We also know that big tobacco would love this, and we also know that it would be in the best interest for big tobacco to ban flavors, because smoking has been on the decline ever since the vaping industry started catering to all flavor profiles for each individual ex smoker. I prefer blueberry custard personally. It's not the government or the states job to police children for their parents, especially if it's obvious that doing so will kill many adult Americans that have to buy from a black market or go back to smoking. Also, preventing eliquid companies from shipping to Maine does the exact same thing. I can't afford to pay $30 for a bottle of liquid that will last me a half a day. The best option is to have people show an ID when they order or buy flavored eliquid, and let us live freely. I don't like the government telling me I can't do something to myself, when it's obvious that when I vape a flavor, it's not hurting anyone but myself. Kids don't have credit cards, so the mail ban makes no sense. Kids will vape or start smoking like they did back in the 90's. But maybe that's your ultimate goal. Thank you for reading.