

Renee Parker
Saco

This is too important an opportunity pass up. Our young people are dying every day. These are sisters, brothers, parents, partners and friends whose lives have been stolen unnecessarily by a drug that was known to be addictive from the beginning. It is imperative that the money only goes to abating the opioid and substance use crisis. At the very least, they are owed an opportunity to get better. These funds can make that possible! Any other use of the funds would be unethical and shameful for the state.