We have no idea what the long term effects of these experimental "vaccines" will have on our health, or the health of the unborn generation to come. There is no way to research this other than wait for the outcome. It is completely normal for healthy people to not want to be part of an experiment when we are seeing people who are getting Covid-19 ending up being sick for just a couple of days, compared to the unknown risks of injecting a new technology into their systems. I am not saying high risk people should not be "vaccinated" I am saying that low risk people should not be forced.

Both of my teenage children had Covid-19 last week along with both of my sisters children and they were each sick for 2 days. My unvaccinated daughter showed no more illness than her older "vaccinated" sister.

I am a licensed Paramedic and I walked away from a 20 year career at United Ambulance in Lewiston because I was unwilling to submit myself to this experiment.

As a Paramedic, I saw the truth of this virus, not the nonsense reported to us by the media. I have treated close to a hundred Covid-19 patients and I never got it because it is drilled into us how to avoid exposure.

And to that end, there is no data to suggest any patients are getting it from healthcare workers (accidental exposures from patients to healthcare workers can occur, but it is arguably never the other way around).

To mandate that healthcare workers be part of this "vaccine" experiment is needlessly diminishing our already crippled healthcare staff in Maine.

I have seen nurses in the CMMC ED cry because they are so overwhelmed, due to low staffing and being overwhelmed with sick patients, not Covid-19 patients, but patients who are thus, because they have spent their lives making very unhealthy choices, which has become a blight on our medical system as a whole.

These mandates will hurt that state of Maine more than it will help, in fact it is not helping at all. Ask front line nurses and Paramedics if they support the mandate! Ask them! They may be for vaccination, but they are definitely against depleting their already crippled workforce!!
