

Kara Kilmartin
Casco

This bill should pass.

I didn't take the decision to not get vaccinated lightly. When the vaccine rolled out I was seven weeks pregnant with my daughter. I made the decision at the time that I felt was best for myself and my unborn child despite the fact that I was bullied at work and criticized for not getting the vaccine even though it hadn't been studied in pregnant women. It wasn't until after she was born and I was doing my best to nurse her that I had no choice but to get vaccinated or lose my job, my livelihood for my family. It was a devastating decision being told I had to do something that at the time I didn't feel was right but I did it anyway to keep my job and food on my table for my family. After I got the vaccine I did have difficulty nursing and questioned if I made the right choice. In my opinion, this vaccine has not been studied long enough when it comes to reproduction and I do not feel it should be mandated. Your body, your choice. People have to do what they feel is right for themselves not be told what to do