I have direct experience in the power that restorative justice has had on victims and communities. It is a transformational process that allows for everyone to understand how and why certain actions occurred and allows everyone to understand the effects those actions have had on others.

I have worked with the RJ in Belfast, received their training and participated in the process. I have read about other parts on the US and around the world where these others have used this process. It can be amazing.

I welcome others to pursue their learning of this process and to report back to the legislature next year.
