

John Foley
Harrison

The ability to offer short term vacation rentals through our property has allowed my wife and I with two young boys (ages 2 years and 10 months) to purchase our dream house on the lake that we will eventually use solely for ourselves and our boys and will our retirement home down the road. Offering short-term rentals provides the means necessary for my family to afford this property now, make improvements that were neglected by the previous homeowner, and contribute to the town's financial resources (by paying property taxes, hotel taxes, income taxes on the rental income, and improving the value of the property). We've had the opportunity to host families enjoying a much needed pandemic vacation, friend get-togethers, and a visiting nurse and her family working at the local hospital.