I am in Scotland on a tour. Like Maine Scotland receives many tourists to remote areas. Unlike Maine they have Passenger trains AND bike trails. The trains are filled with tourists, local residents, backpackers, and a few bicycles. The bicycle trails except in the city were empty, despite dry and pleasant temperatures. Why would Maine waste a valuable resource of a rail corridor for a little used bike trail when we all know Maine's winters are not conducive to bicycling long distances. Keep the rails, add bike lanes to roads. Let's make Maine green
