

Heather Galvin
Harrison

If I am able to cultivate more plants, I am able to lower prices for cancer patients, people with glaucoma, people who financially can't afford to pay high price tags. It would make this product available to those who really need it. By doing this it will increase supply sales and would allow me to employ more people in turn supporting my local community. This can only mean good things for local Mainers.