

Steven Robinson
Albion

Our family has been working as caregivers from our family farm serving rural communities. We believe we are providing a good service to our patients and that we are doing so consistent with the rules as they existed when we started to develop this business about two years ago. Now, OMP is proposing substantial revisions to the rules, which would probably mean too much regulatory burden for us to continue to do this. We deliver to many folks who say that no one serves them and we do so at reasonable prices.

We invested a substantial amount of money and time and effort to build a business that is barely economically viable but we do it because we feel like we are contributing to people. The proposal to pause new rule-making is a good idea to give a chance for some stability of the legal environment and proper input into the process